Advances in Traumatic Brain Injury and Spinal Cord Injury: Research in Different Regions of the World with Diverse Resources

Submission Deadline: October 15th, 2021

Publication Date: December 2021

Summary: The scope of this special issue covers recent trends in neurotrauma research in different regions of the world, including studies in cranial and spinal trauma from epidemiological studies to clinical studies. Cross sectional and transversal studies, systematic reviews and meta-analysis are also welcome in order to present the different approaches that experts in the field are actually using for generating science at global level, filling gaps in knowledge independent of the level of available resources. This topic is urgently needed due to the actual background where neurotrauma care guidelines and protocols are required in order to decrease heterogeneity of care and the related mortality and disability associated with this disease independent of the level of resources available for care.

Objectives: Presenting and showing to the international community recent advances in neurotrauma research from different regions of the world, performed in local contexts and framed in the new concepts of global neurosurgery.

Keywords: neurotrauma, spinal cord injury, traumatic brain injury, global neurosurgery, clinical research, global surgery, global health, capacity building
